

The Healing Power of Pets

Spending time with pets isn't just fun – it's also good for your health! Studies have shown that interacting with animals can improve physical, emotional and mental wellbeing. This is why some hospitals and old age homes invite specially trained animals to visit their patients and residents.

Playing with pets, like dogs or cats, can help people stay active. Walking a dog encourages regular exercise while playing fetch or grooming your pet gets your body moving. Pets can also help lower blood pressure and improve heart health by reducing stress levels.

Spending time with animals can make people feel calmer and happier. Stroking a cat or playing with a dog releases chemicals in the brain that reduce stress and boost your mood. Pets also provide companionship, especially for people who feel lonely or isolated. They can be a source of comfort during difficult times.

Animals are not only wonderful companions at home but they are also brought into hospitals and old age homes to help people feel better. Therapy dogs, for example, visit sick children to cheer them up. In old age homes, cats help elderly people feel less lonely. Pet visits also bring smiles to everyone's face and create a sense of joy.

Animals have the unique ability to bring us the whole sense of joy, love and care. They are always there for us in the best of ways because they have sensed our pain. By talking to them, petting and playing with them, we reduce our physical and mental suffering.

Whether it's talking with a cat, walking a dog or watching fish swim in a tank, spending time with animals has many benefits. Pets not only bring happiness but also contribute to better health. That's why animals are becoming an important part of better healthcare around the world.
