Introduction

Death as a phenomenon inevitably leaves an imprint on a person's mental and physical state. Unfortunately, experiencing the death of a loved one is even more complicated than an abstract death. One always wants to prolong time with someone one has lost, but it is impossible, which is why death is such a challenging event. Death is hard for everyone, especially when it affects their family. Facing death is an ordeal because it leads to nervousness, prolonged sadness, and pain of loss.

Nervousness and Prolonged Sadness

First, facing death is an ordeal because there is nervousness after a loss. It leads to an altered perception of reality, in which one is exposed to dangers in the form of illness or a car accident. The nervousness is kept at a high level, preventing one from functioning and adequately perceiving difficulties and obstacles. I believe it relates to the fear of death, which develops and strengthens after experiencing a loss. The person needs to come to terms with death but is worried that something terrible will happen to him or other loved ones. The fear of being alone further likely increases our nervousness, which is why it becomes so hard for us after the loss of someone.

Prolonged Sadness

Second, facing death is an ordeal because after a loss person gets prolonged sadness. It is a normal feeling after death because we long for the person who has died. Our sadness is an attempt to cope with anxiety and negative expressive emotions. I think it is essential for us to have time to grieve and be sad because losing a dear person is challenging, regardless of the conditions. Even prerequisites (for example, illness) will not diminish sadness after death because we are deprived of some good stuff. Prolonged sadness is a time for reflection and remembrance of good moments together.

Our Stories John Martin Fischer, 2009-05-06 In this collection of essays on the metaphysical issues pertaining to death the meaning of life and freedom of the will John Martin Fischer argues against the Epicureans that death can be a bad thing for the individual who dies He defends the claim that something can be a bad thing a misfortune for an individual even if he never experiences it as bad and even if he does not any longer exist Fischer also defends the commonsense asymmetry in our attitudes toward death and prenatal nonexistence we are indifferent to the time before we are born but we regret that we do not live longer Further Fischer argues against the immortality curmudgeons such as Heidegger and Bernard Williams that immortal life could be desirable and shows how the defense of the possible badness of death and the possible goodness of immortality exhibit a similar structure on Fischer's view the badness of death and the goodness of life can be represented on spectra that display certain continuities Building on Fischer's previous book My Way a major aim of this volume is to show important connections between issues relating to life and death and issues relating to free will More specifically Fischer argues that we endow our lives with a certain distinctive kind of meaning an irreducible narrative dimension of value by exhibiting free will Thus in acting freely we transform our lives so that our stories matter
