MacDonald, 2000 In the years between the First and Second World Wars Existentialist writers and thinkers dramatically reshaped the central topics of immediate intellectual and philosophical concern The Existentialists were not so much influenced in a thoughtful meditative way by the terrible events unfolding about them as they were provoked and threatened by a challenge to dominant worldviews Their writings indicated a profound crisis in philosophy itself as well as European culture at large and responded to a complex situation which artists novelists and film makers also addressed They became actively engaged in articulating a new vision that would define the philosopher's own moral and political responsibility a task which became possible as the consequence of their radically new reassessment of the unique status of human being For the Existentialist a human being is not just a thinking thing nor an instance of a timeless essence but a unique manner of existence The Existentialist Reader is an important addition to the available literature it offers an anthology of key texts across a broad range of themes by eight Existentialist philosophers Simone de Beauvoir Albert Camus Martin Heidegger Karl Jaspers Gabriel Marcel Maurice Merleau Ponty Jose Ortega y Gasset and Jean Paul Sartre In his comprehensive Introduction Paul MacDonald describes the intellectual and philosophical scene between the wars and outlines the central characteristics of the various Existentialists approach to immediate and pressing issues of their time After passing the main figures in review he concentrates on a careful exposition and analysis of distinctively Existentialist themes such as absurdity anxiety alienation and death and the ways in which the various thinkers diverged in their understanding of human being The Introduction leads the reader into the arena of Existentialist argument by carefully situating each philosopher in terms of their relation to other thi

of the eighteenth through twentieth centuries Old English texts and postmodernist productions that have served as recurrent intertexts for contemporary theory The contributors treat such currently vital questions as the role of the author canon formation gender causality and the social dimension of texts They illuminate old assumptions and new ideas about agency that lie behind notions of influence and they examine models of an anonymous textual field that lie behind notions of intertextuality The volume takes much of its character from its own intertextual origin as a group project of the English faculty at the University of Wisconsin Madison Though diverse in their academic interests concerns and experience the contributors participated in an ongoing intellectual exchange that is a model of how new scholarship can arise from dialogue
