

Transients

Transient waveforms exhibit high frequencies that are produced at the period of switching process.

They are the natural frequency of the system and are not related to the fundamental frequency.

Transients are usually dissipated.

Transients are related with the variations in system.

They are not periodic.

Harmonics

Harmonics arise in steady state or for several seconds and are not related to the switching operation.

They are the integral multiple of the fundamental frequency.

Harmonics are not dissipated.

Harmonics are related with the repeated process of the load.

These are periodic.
