

Forbidden love

Under the covers, just you and me.
When I think about us, that's what I see.
Not because it's where we want to be,
but because concealed is the only place where we feel free.
I know loving you is wrong,
that we don't belong.
Your lips against mine seem to sing me a song that to them sounds like sins all along.
How can our love be from pure so far,
if I don't even know who you are?
Whenever at night we're sitting in your car,
instead of praying to god, I pray to every star.
How can a feeling like love, so soft and tender be called awful, just because of our gender?
I caress your hands even softer,
knowing we'll never hold them in front of the altar.
My parents tell me they're proud,
but how can they be, if loving you is not allowed?
The two of us, we'll never be able to love aloud,
when our feelings have to perish in the crowd.
Though I don't even know who you are,
I know our love will leave a scar.
Not on us, not on each other,
but on the heart of my mother,
When I like women, her own child,
at the thought of grandchildren she's always smiled.
Now her own daughter is living out a love so wild.
I fear that between us, my feelings will always remain unreconciled.
I know our love is forbidden,
that when I meet you, we'll have to keep it hidden.
At night I lay awake guilt-ridden, knowing that in my family I'll never fit in.
Why must a love that pure be kept under the cover?
Why can't I be proud and show the world my lover?
Why can our lips only ever hover?
Why are we scared that if they touch, they will discover?
They want me to love, but do they really want me to love the way I do?
Will they be okay with it, if my love is with you?
The feeling of disgust - are they going to get through?
Will the ideal of love someday be written anew?
I hope one day it will be true,
and I can say I'm proud to be in love with you.
