

Supply chain management case study.

Tamagoyaki. What is egg house? Had grown from a small mom and pop lunch box shop. To the largest lunchbox producer in Tokyo. The owner. And his son's entrepreneur leadership and strong orientation lead toward efficient supply chain management, and the company grew rapidly even during Japan's decades long economic stagnation. In the year 1982, they sold 3000 lunch boxes a day. In the year 2000, the number increased to 50,000 and the revenue has been reached to 5700 million Japanese yen. In the year 2010, they produced and delivered 70,000 boxes a day and they even provided employment to 650 people, full and part-time, and grew their revenue to JPY. 7000 million.

Their uniqueness.

They produced and delivered high quality lunch boxes at a low price of JPY 430. Two office workers in Tokyo metropolitan area.

Uh, they received orders at 9:00 AM until 10:30 AM every day, and they deliver the food by noon. So the delivery time. Was very small. That is 1.5 hours for last orders considering the long transportation time in BC Tokyo City. They hardly ever missed a delivery deadline, although the demand was large and fluctuated from day-to-day. The deliveries ranging between 60,000 to 75,000.

Their average loss ratio was only 0.06%. While Japan industries average voiced was 2%. This translated to only 42 lunchboxes left over from 70,000 total production a day.

Product

They offered only one menu per day. So each lunch box contained more than six items, most of which were made from organic and natural ingredients. The lunch boxes were freshly made each morning again and kept warm until delivered. They have also. Given their menu items.

Although they served only one menu a day, the menu changed daily. They fixed their menu 14 days in advance and published them both on its website and on a sheet of paper handed out to customers. This way they could search for the best recipes and ingredients until the last minute.
