

Essential Montessori Homeschool Materials

Montessori is famous for its materials – the pink tower, the golden beads, the moveable alphabet. These are classroom icons. They also tend to be very expensive. No wonder families worry that homeschooling is out of reach.

To this we say – RELAX! You don't need to spend a fortune to bring Montessori to life at home.

Filling your house with every Montessori material isn't necessary or advised! First and foremost, learning materials are tools to help your kids explore concepts. If a specific material would benefit your child, get it. If not, don't.

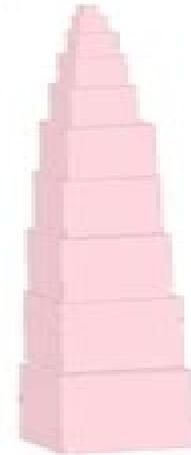

The same goes for buy versus DIY. As long as the material teaches the underlying concept accurately, it's not important whether it comes from a fancy retailer or is made at home from cardboard.

Bottom line – it's the material's PURPOSE that matters, not the material itself! Over the years, we've identified a few common essentials most parents find helpful. We're pleased to share 21 of our favorites with you in this document, organized by the 10 core subject areas kids aged 2 to 9 will explore.

Beyond these 21 common essentials, you can evaluate a material's purpose and its value in your home by asking a few questions:

- What is my child's level of readiness?
- What is my child trying to learn?
- What does the material do to help teach it?
- Can I teach the same concept with something different?
- How durable do I need these materials to be?
- What's my budget?

Learning to answer these questions like a Montessorian takes time and support, but you can do it! In fact, it's one of the core concepts members learn in our Homeschool of the Redwoods programs. For those looking for more immediate support, we also offer Constellation, which takes the guesswork out of materials and lessons planning by providing members each month with a curated set of thematic activities.
