

Mini Lesson

Make an illustrated note sheet about conflicts in stories. Divide a sheet of paper into six equal sections. Write one type of conflict in each section and make an illustration to show each one.

The conflicts in stories have a basic form:

1. Character versus character, in which a problem arises between two characters. The two characters are usually called the protagonist (hero) and the antagonist (villain).
2. Character versus self, in which the character has a line of struggle which must be overcome.
3. Character versus super natural, in which the character must defeat something supernatural like a ghost, magician, or witch.
4. Character versus society, in which the hero or heroine must change unjust laws, an unjust ruler, or an oppressive culture.
5. Character versus nature, in which animals, natural disasters, or severe weather create a problem.
6. Character versus technology, in which a robot, machine, or computer form of technology create a problem that must be overcome.

EXERCISE Story Map

Every story has a beginning, a middle, and an ending. The beginning is a chance for you to tell about your character and his or her life. Your character has something, meets certain people and has something happen that triggers the story. Maybe a problem arises. Perhaps an adventure begins. It could be that your character had something unexpected happen that will somehow change the course of his or her life. The beginning of your story is a time to set up the background information for your reader.

Use the "Story Map" graphic from the previous page to lead down the beginning, middle, and end of a fanciful story you know. Here are a few ideas of stories you could explore:

- Where the Wild Things Are by Maurice Sendak
- The Cup in the Hat by Dr. Seuss
- The Story of Ferdinand by Munro Leaf
- Harriet and Gertrude by Jacob and William Green
- Charlotte's Web by E.B. White
- Jehus and the Giant Peach by Russell Hoban
- The Boy Who Swam by Mary Norton
- The Chronicles of Narnia by C.S. Lewis
- The Glass by Ted Lowy

You aren't including every detail, but rather you are stepping back and seeing the big picture of the story. Once you've practiced with familiar stories, try using the Story Map graphic to plan out your own story ideas.

EXERCISE Climax

The climax of a story is the most exciting part. It's the part when you aren't quite sure if the hero or heroine will overcome a crisis.

Play a game called Climax Champion. One person will begin by telling a problem that a character might face in the climax of a story.

The hero is about to get eaten by a witch.

Then the next person will try to create the hero with an even more dramatic climax.

His best friend is about to fall off a cliff.

The next person will try to add to both of the previous ones.

There's a fire-breathing dragon chasing the villain who are about to perish.

They will continue until someone fails to come up with a more exciting climax. List down any of the climax ideas you think you might like to write about and add the list to your story section of your writer's notebook.

EXERCISE Problems and Solutions

To be complete, a story has to have a problem and a solution to the problem. Talk through stories you know and discuss the problems and solutions in those stories.

Here are a few to get you started:

- The Gingerbread Man
- The Three Little Pigs
- Coldback and the Three Bears
- Harriet and Gertrude
- The Three Billy Goats Gruff
- Little Red Riding Hood

Do a quick write of a short story in the style of one of these tales that has at least 3 clear problems and a single clear solution. Add it to your journal.

EXERCISE Story Mountain

Good stories have a structure that builds tension as the story unfolds. A story mountain is a graphic organizer that helps you build tension into your story. Imagine climbing a mountain. Before you begin, you take in the scenery and enjoy the company of your party. Together, you begin to climb.

Mini Lesson

Cause and effect are a really important part of creating a plot in a story. With each action you write, it needs to have an effect on the characters. Your characters must change, learn, grow, or have something happen with each event within the story.

The little coward let for the dog, "The dog died and then the queen died" is a story. The kind died, and then the queen died of grief" is a plot.

Look through a story you are writing and try to find an effect of some of the events you have written about. If you didn't spot any effects, add one to your story by writing them on sticky notes and sticking them to the event in your pages. Ask yourself what effect the event had on your character.

Mini Lesson

Time order is important in stories, unless you are clearly including a flashback. Tell the story in the order it happens. Writing the events in order will help your reader understand the events and the timeline. Plan out the events and put them in order before you start your story. As you plan, think about the story mountain to create a story that has a plot.
