Ghost Upon Your Path:

A Ghost Upon Your Path John McCarthy, 2002 A personal exploration of Irish identity We all have a need to belong to have a place we feel tied to our nation our family or our home town So how is it that one can find these feelings of belonging in a place where one has never lived Despite his Irish name John McCarthy never thought of himself as Irish Yet ever since he first visited Ireland over twenty years ago he has had a sense of another connection apart from his antecedents To explore this affinity he sets up home on the west coast of Ireland and immerses himself in the lives of those around him In the midst of a welcoming caring and close knit community he hears stories of isolation frustration and even madness There McCarthy finds an Ireland that is not just the idealized place so often presented to visitors but one beneath which run darker currents
