

6 Best Practices for Protecting Client Confidentiality

Build trust with your clients by prioritizing client confidentiality with these 6 best practices:

01

Use a secure file sharing and messaging platform.

Emails are not secure and should not be used to exchange sensitive information with clients. Instead, adopt a secure file sharing and messaging platform like Titanfile to encrypt outgoing and incoming files and messages.

02

Control access to physical documents in the workplace.

Storing physical confidential documents within a controlled access environment bolsters security measures by limiting document retrieval and handling to authorized personnel only.

03

Comply with industry regulations.

Industry regulations such as ISO 27001, SOC 2, HIPAA, and PIPEDA provide you with detailed security guidelines and checklists you can use to improve workplace security.

04

Host routine security training for staff.

Storing physical confidential documents within a controlled access environment bolsters security measures by limiting document retrieval and handling to authorized personnel only.

05

Stay alert of new security threats.

It's much more difficult to defend against security threats that you're not aware of. By understanding new risks and how they work, you can deploy security measures to prevent them from bypassing your security infrastructure.

06

Utilize up-to-date security technology.

Technology is rapidly evolving, which means cyber-criminals are also advancing in their approaches to steal confidential client data. Keeping your technology toolkit up-to-date helps you fortify defenses against evolving threats, safeguarding sensitive data and ensuring it remains inaccessible to unauthorized parties.
