Since the Attack on the U. S. S. Cole Jim Saxton,2001-04 Air Force Posture Statement United States. Department of the Air Force,1998 Force Protection James F. Lindner,Naval War College (U.S.),1995 SafeForce 21: Force

Protection for the Force Projection Army of the 21st Century ,2000 Army safety activities are organized to protect the force and enhance warfighting capabilities through a systematic and progressive process of hazard identification and risk management These activities support commanders by early identification of safety problems that could degrade readiness or mission accomplishment When safety problems are identified actions to address them are initiated and implemented through command channels The Army Safety Program provides a source of technical support to assist commanders in achieving their goals This support embodies policies procedures criteria information and personnel assets throughout the Army and its supporting agencies and contractors With the support of a cohesive Army Safety Program commanders can institute a risk management program that will allow them to accomplish their mission while maintaining readiness and protecting the force Except for requirements levied by public law or imposed by higher headquarters it is up to commanders to decide what are acceptable levels of risk and actions to take to control those risks This differs from traditional approaches wherein safety offices were perceived as tending to impose operational restrictions Force Protection: It's Time for a Joint Force

Component Commander for Antiterrorism/Force Protection ,2001 As today s military operations increasingly involve non traditional application of our military services our enemy also becomes non traditional There is essentially no credible force that can assert its military might against our armed forces in the traditional methods of warfare Therefore they must resort to unconventional attacks against our armed forces with the intent of constructing an atmosphere of terror among our forces and weakening the national will of our citizens at home Forces critical to the Operational Commander are threatened daily by terrorist organizations on both a local and global level Success today depends upon the strong defense of our forces This can only be accomplished by standardizing our force protection procedures integrating those procedures into our training fully funding both training and equipment and placing one individual in charge of executing those procedures the Joint Force Component Commander for Antiterrorism Force Protection Sophisms of Protection Frédéric Bastiat,1888

Force Protection James F. Lindner,1995 Force Protection Doctrine: an Operational Necessity ,1998 Given the current world order with the U S as the only superpower our level of global commitment remains high and as such the U S can expect its armed forces to be engaged in multiple MOOTWs worldwide now and for the foreseeable future As we have seen in Beirut Khobar Towers and even in Somalia these operations can be just as deadly as full scale war Force protection for all future military operations must therefore be seriously considered as a critical function at the operational level not just as independent efforts at the tactical level as we have seen in the past We must develop a joint force protection doctrine which is focused at the operational level and geared for MOOTWs This doctrine should include the intelligence infrastructure necessary to best serve the CINCs It should also include physical security precautions as well as education and training procedures We will never be able to predict nor thwart every potential attack against U S forces conducting MOOTW However it is apparent that our approach to force protection has to change by first establishing an operational focus We owe it to our troops and our country

USAF Force Protection: Do We Really Care ,1998 The US Air Force provides the preponderance of the world s most lethal technologically superior airpower yet does comparatively little to protect it when its most vulnerable on the ground Although the Air Force concept of force projection requires deployment into hostile zones it traditionally placed little emphasis on protecting its force unlike its sister services and close NATO partner the Royal Air Force Plainly the Air Force has yet to institutionalize force protection Service leadership continues to wrestle with integrating force protection with the flying mission historically reacting to security events vice protecting against them and therefore repeating the lessons of history Without a greater understanding of modern force protection roles and missions Air Force leadership is unwittingly increasing the criminal and combat risk to American airpower

Force Protection: The Paranoid Survive ,2001 U S forces while engaged in commitments throughout the world in support of the National Military Strategy face a formidable threat from terrorists This terrorist threat exists throughout the spectrum of military operations Lessons from the past indicate that terrorists will seek to exploit weaknesses in our force protection They will find seams in our woven force protection fabric and rip them open when we are least expecting them to do so The U S military must not only learn from past incidents but observe trends in terrorist organizations and closely monitor their capabilities to better provide force protection for its troops Terrorist organizations are becoming increasingly global and are using technology to expand their reach intelligence targeting and lethality As this threat evolves so should our ability to counter that threat The Geographic CINCs Service Component Commanders and Joint Task Force Commanders must lead a comprehensive proactive approach to providing force protection against this growing terrorist threat This approach should involve force protection planning throughout all phases of military operations Without an antiterrorism element in our force protection planning we will always be reacting to the terrorists actions

Force Protection Gail M. Gilbert,2000 Force protection in the Air Force has taken on greater significance in the new but well overdue recognition of its contribution to air and space power It now has higher priority than ever with senior leadership extensive research and development efforts are ongoing and a Force Protection Battlelab has been established all focused on this one complex mission Herculean efforts by the entire DoD particularly since the 1996 bombing of Khobar Towers have resulted in the publishing of literally thousands of pages on program guidance at all DoD levels Unfortunately the terms Force Protection and Antiterrorism are now nearly synonymous This limited program focus does not facilitate a structure designed to ensure a true force protection effort especially considering the challenges faced by today s Expeditionary Aerospace Force The purpose of this study is to review existing force protection programs and ongoing initiatives and then attempt to contribute to further program development from a bottoms up perspective The bottom in this case is the base level support group commander The challenges facing support group commanders in today s Air Force are great perhaps too great Managing support operations at permanent main operating bases with all its built in support structure is one thing Leading deployed support operations of which force protection is just one aspect is another Simply stated current expectations of the support group commander are unrealistic and doomed to failure This study reviews current USAF force protection documentation through a literature review and then proposes a systematic approach to program development designed to enhance synergy in force protection operations It maintains throughout that the key to effective force protection operations is the role played by the combat support commander

Force Protection for Deployed Air Force Resources, Protecting Against Ground Attacks in the USCENTCOM Theater Alfred M. Lewis,2001 Prior to the Khobar Towers bombing in June 1996 force protection was not a wholesale term in the Air Force Antiterrorism was the expression used to describe measures taken to deter terrorist attacks and protect installations Force protection is not a synonym for antiterrorism Instead force protection is a larger effort designed to provide comprehensive security for personnel and resources with antiterrorism being a subset This paper will canvass force protection measures against ground attacks from strategic to tactical levels for Air Force personnel and resources in the U S Central Command theater of operations

Force Protection in Peace Operations Louis A. Traverzo,Army War College (U.S.),1997 During the post Cold War period peace operations have driven the OPTEMPO for all services faster and farther than anyone could have projected Politically sensitive peace operations force commanders to think not only of the tactical and operational ramifications of the employment of their forces but the psychological effect on the local populace and public opinion of the people back home In light of that commanders at all levels are becoming extremely sensitized to the force protection aspect of the mission The result is force protection has assumed a wide encompassing identity of its own that is impacting on mission performance This paper will look at the lessons learned from various peacekeeping operations and determine the commonality of the operations that have succeeded and those that have not and the reasons why The study s intent is to determine whether there is a void in our doctrine and generate discussion for change as necessary
