"Part sustained jazz riff, part Hemingway, these exercises in unreflected momentum swirl with atmosphere. . . . Eubanks writes like a train at full throttle."

First Thing Smoking:

The First Thing Smoking Nelson Eubanks, 2003 Here is a provocative and fresh new voice in fiction and a stunning collection of seventeen interconnected short stories set in the urban and exotic locales of New York City and Brazil In dazzling jazz like prose that pulses with the rhythm of the street Nelson Eubanks traces the influences on and evolution of Maceo from impressionable adolescent to twentysomething man each snapshot of memory bursting with event and emotion In Malta Scheffer nine year old Maceo slips out of a white world of private schools to fade back into his brown world where stickball and dreams of glory just may provide the ticket out of poverty The First Thing Smoking explores the prejudice and hatred that exist within a family when skin color varies between darker and lighter shades of black In Uncle Raymond eighteen year old Maceo learns about his uncle who once showed such musical promise but later inexplicably descended into mental illness Avenida Atl ntica and A Lie in Seven Parts depict an older Maceo as he tries to escape his growing awareness of lust and desire as well as the racial strife and violence of his childhood that has peppered the towns of Brazil Emerging family secrets changing neighborhoods the politics of class and education the disintegration of relationships waning passions Nelson Eubanks seamlessly blends these powerful themes into a rich work of fiction The First Thing Smoking heralds the arrival of a powerful and nuanced literary talent
